Selma Tennenbaum Rossen, her sister Dr. Edith Tennenbaum Shapiro, her parents and one grandmother survived the Holocaust in Poland by hiding in attics, cellars, and bunkers aided by individuals recognized as righteous Gentiles, most notably Helena Skrzyszewska, who along with two friends hid the family on their farm.

Selma was born in 1936 in Zloczow, in what was then Poland. Out of the approximately 10,000 Jews who lived in Zlochow before the war, approximately 70 survived. Six of them were children including Selma (now an engineer), her sister (now a psychiatrist) and Roald Hoffman who won the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1981.

The Tennenbaum family arrived in the United States in 1946 when Selma was 10 years old. She attended Barnard College for her undergraduate work and completed graduate work in engineering at Stevens Institute of Technology. She recently retired as President and CEO of Hansome Energy Systems, Linden, New Jersey.
