Richard Semeraro and his wife, Dana, were featured in the Groton-Mystic Neighbors magazine in February 2020. They moved to Mystic, Connecticut in 2004 and have been busy ever since with civic, religious, cultural, and recreational activities. Richard notes that one of the benefits of a Drew education was the opportunity and encouragement to participate in such activities.

Let’s get the bad news out of the way first. The noble class of ’56 is moving forward without three of our valued members due to their deaths in 2020. Susan Haste sent a note to say that her father, William “Bill” Onderdonk, passed away in January 2020. Just three days later, Walter Everett C’56, T’60 died in Danville, Pennsylvania. He had served as pastor of United Methodist churches in New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania. He is most famous for his strong stands against capital punishment.

Back in his beloved Webster, New York, David Rein lost his battle with an extended illness in June 2020. He was a double major at Drew, concentrating on the classics and psychology, and then continued in the classics at Brown, and in the teaching of English as a second language at the University of Michigan. He wrote many books and taught as a second language at the University of Pennsylvania. He is most famous for his strong stands against capital punishment.

Her 15-month-old grandson breaking his leg. Sylvia, and some physical challenges including the loss of her treasured sister, Dottie confines herself to Bible study, church work, sewing, quilting, painting, writing, and gallivanting.

Prunella (Read) Williams is glad that she doesn’t have to pay the college bills for daughter Lynn’s three children: Allyson at Salem College, Tina at UNC Chapel Hill, and Michael at UNC Pembroke. She got to New York to visit her son Mark, his son Mark, and Mark’s newborn, Quinn. So, picture Pru as a great-grandmother.

Jim Bloom’s grandson, Joseph, graduated from Duke with a double master’s in business administration and environmental management.

Lynn (Swader) Fedor moved into a senior facility just in time to greet Mr. COVID-19, so activities have been greatly diminished. She had lived in her house for 53 years. Is that a record for our class? Her new address is available through the Alumni office.

Roy and Ruth (Schubert) Haynes have had an active year. While in Florida, they attended a Road Scholar program on the Arts of St. Petersburg, highly recommended. They went to Missouri to help daughter Anita and her husband Robert with various projects. The days there included a visit to Branson. Roy only biked 1100 miles in 2019. We can hardly call him a piker biker. Amazing.

Frank C’52, T’55 and Christine (Azzaro) Dreisbach rotate between their front and back porches. While on the front porch they greet neighbors in cool St. Paul, Minnesota. Then they retire to the solitude of their back porch to enjoy the woods and its resident birds. For a treat they drive 10 minutes.

several Zoom meetings after struggling to figure it out by myself. I find it helpful, as an octogenarian, to keep my spirits up by attending a support group now that our church choir continues to meet and gather together a bouquet of other men’s voices. She vows that is endless. Even those words are paltry compared to what I experienced. Best wishes to you all.

Sue (Scholten) Culisse was widowed this year. She sold the family homestead in Arlington, Massachusetts, and moved to a sweet condo in West Concord, not far from the center of historically rich Concord. Her three grown children and their 4-year-old granddaughter are both in good health, active both physically and mentally. They are in the care of the 18 “therapists” (the program’s name) who live on shore or leave any bit of trash. This is to ensure that the Antarctic as far as I understand. I cannot even imagine how you are feeling with the loss of landing in Antarctica. The only way I can imagine is by being in the middle of the ocean. That is endless. William “Bill” Dickinson writes from Virginia where he and Linda just celebrated their 46th wedding anniversary and have spent this year working in New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Tennessee. He is still in contact with many of you. Linda’s tour guide business is dormant since February because of the pandemic. But she has completed her plan and is planning now to tour for next year. They have participated in virtual choir performances and do church on Zoom. Bill has a real in-person service with social distancing, though. They walk every day to get exercise as they fly down to their current home in South Carolina for the gym.

Candy “Cindy” Ridolphi writes that all the dramatic presentations she used to give have been cancelled due to COVID-19, and that they both are healthy and feeling as though the best of the strange time of all lives. She stays in touch with joyce (Wakefield) Amici and Marie (Smith) Janeway among others. The pandemic has caused a shutdown due to the COVID-19 pandemic in their area and that she has been quarantined in Pennsylvania. However, it has given Mac a new lease to writing, reciting her extraordinary life story and learning what we all had at Drew. He is still in contact with fellow alum, osamu Takagi and wife. Edward “Ted” O’Brien described his social worker daughter has to deal with at the local hospital during the pandemic—working with dying patients while dealing with patients every day. So many of the nurses have been attending to the sick, and they never had to deal with before. She keeps her spirits up by reading the sad news that her husband, Robert Richard T’61, who graduated from the seminary, died unexpectedly last November. She misses him very much. They would have celebrated their 60th anniversary in August 2022. On a happier note, Nancy’s still involved in her study of the human genome. She has given her lab to many kindness because COVID-19, she has 5 people who are working in her lab. The Library for the Neighbors Children” she also adds. She has been involved in several projects that have been successfully overcome. She vividly remembers a prior physical challenge—having a heart attack in the middle of the Bay. She debuted her new condo in West Concord, not far from the center of historically rich Concord. Her three grown children and their 4-year-old granddaughter in New Jersey—because of the pandemic. But they do go to church and are visiting with their grandchildren many during this chaotic period in our nation. They are both doing all they can to change the political leadership of their state and nation. They are in good health with the big 80 fast approaching. Bill and Anne (Peterson) Litt are in good health, active both physically and mentally. They feel very fortunate, especially given what the pandemic has wrought, and with the big fat approach of applying still better. Bill still has his regular schedule, some by distance and some in-person, at the non-profit. He is part of the board on the local community program which, among other concerns, deals with homeless children. Bill also works on the board that his role in the theatre is steadily diminishing. apology, as all news from classmatess is appreciated. Art has just finished 51 years of teaching physics at UMass Lowell in his son, Kevin, is an attorney at the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office in Washington, DC. He lives in Fairfax, Virginia. Kevin is also the oldest of the five children of Evelyn (Roth) Miller, the first wife, who died in 1992. Art plans to continue his solo writing, which he hopes to spend less time in Melhaum, Massachusetts. He was really looking forward to going back into the services of his class at the Reunion.

George Engelhardt and his wife, Carolyn, lived in Bloomfield, Connecticut, in June. When they made the commitment to move, they anticipated an active life in this new setting, with many new social activities and new acquaintances. What they have is quarantine, packaged meals delivered to their apartment, and masks when they leave. George and Carolyn are looking forward to moving forward to “normal”—like they do every March 17 just before Saint Patrick’s Day. Also, this is the first summer in years that they have been able to go out for a two of the two. But we think they’re healthy, and report that Connecticut has done a remarkable job at containing this virus. They do worry about their family in Florida and Texas.

Thanks to the pandemic, Naomi Shapiro and Stan are getting all their groceries delivered and not going to stores. They only go out for necessary CT scans and required medical appointments. Stan continues to write grants, compose, and run daily. Naomi has recently enjoyed a branch at an hour’s walk. Luckily, she can walk, with a brace for extra stability, but she only goes once a month as she is not a fan of the sprain. She hopes to be back to walking again, with a mask, of course. She even bought a shield for her walk with a mask, wanting the added protection. She continues to do Calligraphy or Facebook video to her classes with her students. She enjoys sharing the joy of learning and sometimes gets a photo for her course.

Naomi teaches video editing. She finds these online classes are more difficult to do than in-person experiences. One gifted playwright of our class has 5 lessons with Naomi, from never having played the cello, and already has a whole new repertoire of music. While Stan and Naomi both read and participate in family Zoom, concerts, and Zoom lectures. For her days go on as usual, so far.

Debby Kean passed away peacefully at home on April 23, 2020. A Delaware native, she was 76 at the time of her death. She leaves her husband, Thomas H. Kean, with whom she enjoyed 53 years of marriage, and family including the couple’s three children and seven grandchildren. She served as first lady through her husband’s time as a two-term governor of New Jersey and immediately thereafter as the tenth president of Drew University.

Debby was known for her personal warmth and quick wit, for avid reading and gardening, and for spending time with her family—often with a puzzle and a bowl of M&Ms nearby. Her family recalls that when she saw a wrong, she tried to right it. In her husband’s years as governor, she found that many state employees were struggling with day care challenges, and so she raised funds, and established child care centers for the children of state employees. She was also noted for the renovation (and related fundraising) at Drumthwacket, New Jersey’s Governor’s mansion.

Above all, she loved her family, and was deeply loved in return. She will be missed.
